Joe G. Williams

Joe grew up in Greeley, Colorado graduating from Greeley Central High School and attending Colorado State University for his undergraduate degree. He lived in the shadow of the CSU football stadium where he attended many games and to this day supports the CSU Rams. He went on to attend Drake Law School, graduating with honors and already having 15 trials while in law school. After graduating from law school Joe returned to Colorado with his family and settled down in his hometown of Greeley.

Joe's primary areas of practice are family law and business law. Although experienced in the courtroom, Joe understands the value of finding a resolution outside of court when possible. He strives to find common ground to provide his clients with a favorable resolution without the stress of a trial, but when the trial is necessary Joe leans on his experience to give the best results possible to his clients. Joe is also an accomplished appellate advocate with successful published appellate decisions in both Iowa and Colorado.

When he isn't representing his clients, you can find Joe building computers or mixing up a new batch of home-brewed beer, and he stays active through jiu-jitsu. Joe enjoys spending the majority of his free time with his family. Joe is also involved as a board member of the Weld County Bar Association and is recognized as a top attorney by the National Association of Distinguished Counsel.
